Amy L. Pugner chatted on the phone with her sister as she was painting her new apartment in Washington, Pa., where she had recently moved, on June 8, 2010.

That was the last time Amy's sister spoke with her. Amy, a Latrobe native, had been diagnosed with schizophrenia and had a history of drug abuse. Her family considered the move a good thing—something that seemed to indicate that Amy, was getting her life together, leaving her demons behind and heading in the right direction.

No one is sure when Amy was last seen, but likely it was June 9 or 10, 2010.

Her family became alarmed when, a few days after that last phone call, a man used Amy's cell phone to make several threatening phone calls to them. He demanded money and told them otherwise, "She's dead," according to the Pennsylvania Missing Persons website.

Amy's sister and father drove to Washington to file a missing persons report the next day. Though she had disappeared in the past, it was only for short periods of time and she would still keep in contact by phone. Her family's concern grew when she missed her son's graduation party, something they say she never would have done.

Amy is described as 41 years old at the time of her disappearance, 5-foot-2, 130 pounds, with brown hair and hazel eyes.

Anyone with information about this case, is asked to contact Lt. Det. Daniel Stanek at the Washington City Police Department, 724-223-1386.
